CROSS-CREDITS AND RPL

If you have completed previous studies or work in the same or related area of your course, you may be eligible to receive credit towards your course resulting in a partial or full exemption from completing certain subjects or units. There are two main types of credit: 'cross credit' and 'recognition of prior learning' (RPL).

A cross credit is when you have previously studied a specific subject or unit, and the learning you have completed satisfies the objectives and assessment requirements for a subject or unit in the course you are studying. To apply for cross credit, you must provide an official transcript from the institution where you completed the subject or unit. You may also need to provide an outline of the learning objectives or assessment requirements as part of your application.

Recognition of prior learning (RPL) recognises any relevant prior learning, including formal and informal learning, such as knowledge, skills, competencies, and attributes that you may have acquired through work experience, community involvement, or general life experience. You must provide thorough documentation and evidence for this type of application to be considered.

Requests for cross credit and RPL should be made before enrolling, via the Enrolment Centre. Select the 'Submit Request' link and then select 'Cross Credit and Recognition for Prior Learning'.
